Streaming Media: Rights, Permissions, and Access - Oh My!

So, you want to show a movie or a documentary in your fully online class, but you are not sure where to get started? Have a question about copyright and not sure where to turn? Have a hard copy of a DVD and not sure if, what, how, when and where you can show this media? Found something on YouTube but not sure if it is legit to show in your class? Read on for some tips, tricks and places to turn to as ways to address some of the questions mentioned above.

Step 1: Ask a Librarian

We are here to help. To any of the questions above, a librarian can help.

Step 2: Search Our Resources

Thanks to COVID/CARES funding, for the upcoming academic year, our list of fully online, rights granted, streaming media resources continues to grow. See what we have access to.

Kindly note that at present there is no simple way to search “one and done” through all of our streaming media database collections; if you are searching for a particular known item video title, to be comprehensive you will need to look through all of our streaming media databases. Sorry about that. If there is something you are looking for that you don’t find in any of our streaming media databases, move to Step 3, which will look familiar.

Step 3: Ask a Librarian

We are here to help. If there’s something you want that you can’t find in our current streaming media databases, simply ask. We have other means at our disposal to maybe obtain what you are looking for -- not always, but sometimes, especially for feature films.

Step 4: Ask Early

The earlier you ask, the more hopeful we can be in securing the rights.

Lastly, it pains me to write this, but it needs to be said: there are certain movies and documentaries where there simply are no institutional methods to obtain rights – but that doesn’t mean we can’t try! Generally speaking, if you are looking to show something that is available on Netflix, Amazon Prime, Disney+ or Paramount+, then we likely will not be able to secure rights to the media you wish to show. However, given enough time and patience, we can certainly try!
